Appery, LLC Acquires Verivo Software, Inc. – FAQ

As of May 18, 2015, Appery, LLC (http://appery.io) has acquired Verivo Software, Inc.'s assets, including customer contracts, source code, patents, trademarks, and other intellectual property. Appery is a wholly owned subsidiary of Exadel, Inc. (www.exadel.com), which has twenty years of experience delivering software development solutions worldwide to enterprises such as Sears, UBS, McKesson, Hewlett-Packard, and Disney.

How does this affect Verivo Customers?

Appery will continue providing all development and support for customers as defined in their existing contracts. Customers can also access new products, such as Appery.io, to increase productivity and enable a broader base of innovation.

Do any customers currently use Verivo products with Appery products?

Yes. Several customers, including one major financial institution, are currently using both Appery.io and Verivo products. Enterprises use these platforms together to build mobile and responsive web apps, including both employee- and customer-facing apps.

What are the combined strengths of Appery's and Verivo's products?

Appery.io has a strong development environment and mobile backend services. Verivo's products have strong enterprise integration and security. Our complementary platforms combine to offer enterprises a world-class mobile development environment with multiple strengths.

How will the products evolve over time?

Our objective is to take the best of each of the products to create the world's leading platform for cross-device app development and enterprise deployment. Our integration efforts are ongoing, and more details will be available as these efforts continue. Our intention is to meet the needs of our entire customer base, including customers using Appery.io and Verivo products.